Brief Introduction:

GHRP6 is an important member of the peptide family. It is a six-peptide composed of L-amino acids and D-amino acids. It is a synthetic simulation of ghrelin.

The most prominent effect is to simulate the body's own ghrelin (a peptide hormone in the human body) to promote gastric emptying, resulting in a strong sense of hunger, and inhibit the secretion of ghrelin to change the mechanism of sugar metabolism to build muscle, but not fat, only lean weight.

In terms of sexual desire, G-6 does not directly act on the hippocampal pituitary gonad axis, but directly enhances the desire for sexual activity through the binding of cerebral cortex receptors. The effect of G-6 is simple and direct, directly responsible for the final result, and ultimately improves the user's sexual desire.
