Brief Introduction:

It's a peptidomimetic, which is a small protein-like chain that is designed to imitate a peptide, converted into an experimental proapoptotic product that is used for cellular death. This drug was initially created as a cancer treatment designed to starve cancer cells of a blood supply so they would stop growing. The effects of Adipotide have shown that the drug actually starves fat cells of blood forcing them to die and be reabsorbed into the body. Initial tests were done on rats and then moved on to monkeys. The results from testing on rats showed a 30 percent decrease in body weight. After four weeks of daily injections of Adipotide followed by four weeks of non-treatment, 10 obese female rhesus monkeys lost an average of 11 percent of their body weight and 39 percent of fat deposits. Most of the loss was experienced during the non-treatment period.

FTPP (Adipotide) purpose is contributing to weight loss. The substance has exhibited favourable outcomes in tests; the main feature of adipotide is its property of fast loss of weight.
