Brief Introduction:

Propionic acid composition is a commonly used composition for injection. The added propionic acid composition will slowly synthesize the speed at which the acid is released from the injection, in a few days. Therefore, the synthesis of propionic acid only has a duration, but other synthetic compounds such as heptane and cyclopentadiene. Most people think that the development of propionic acid gel is a faster synthesis method, and propylene injection is used for the old synthesis, which is developed by the quick effect. The slower and more comfortable features are closer to shrinking. As an injection animation, he takes effect quickly, and can more intuitively capture size and strength.

Testosterone propionate was first born in 1935. In a series of experiments, propionate was used to increase the therapeutic use of testosterone by slowing the release of testosterone into the serum. Two years later, Schering, Germany, will launch the first testosterone propionate product called Testoviron®. Testosterone propionate was also the first commercially available injectable testosterone ester on the prescription drug market in the United States, and before 1960 was still the main form of injectable testosterone-like products in the world. For example, in the early 1950s, when steroids were first tested by a small number of American athletes, the only anabolic/androgenic steroids readily available on the market were methyltestosterone, testosterone propionate and aqueous testosterone (testosterone suspension) .
