Brief Introduction:

Human menopausal gonadotropin (hMG) is a fertility drug administered by doctors by injection. It is commonly used to increase the chances of pregnancy for women who have fertility problems. These injections stimulate a woman's ovaries to produce several eggs instead of one. Sometimes it can also be used in men with low sperm counts, due to low levels of gonadotropin produced by the body. Human menopausal gonadotropin injections contain two hormones naturally produced by the pituitary gland: luteinizing hormone (LH) and follicle-stimulating hormone (FSH).
