Brief Introduction:

This peptide sequence is found in proteins of the extracellular matrix such as the α chain of collagen, and it is believed to be released during wounding and inflammation. A feedback stimulation of collagen repair has also been proposed for this peptide, but the main benefit to photoaged skin is believed to be the enhanced delivery of copper. It is found to have the beneficial effects on collagen stimulation.

Palmitoyl Tripeptide-1 is a matrikine, it stimulates collagen and glycosaminoglycan synthesis. Palmitoyl Tripeptide-1 reinforces the epidermis and diminishes wrinkles.

Palmitoyl tripeptide-1 can greatly promote the production of skin collagen, make facial skin plump and give elasticity, increase skin water content and moisture retention, make skin soft and smooth to touch, brighten skin from the inside out and no longer dull.
