Discription of human growth peptide 191aa

Human Growth Hormone, commonly referred to as HGH or HGH 191AA, is produced in healthy humans by the pituitary gland, which is located at the base of the brain. As the name suggests, HGH controls the growth of the body, making sure that cells grow and mature at the proper rate.

HGH was discovered when doctors were trying to understand why some children didn't develop at the right rate, and remained small and weak. It was found that injections of HGH corrected this problem and enabled children to grow properly. This was obviously a great blessing to those people with a particular condition but as an interesting off-shoot from that research it was found that HGH could affect the growth of normal individuals. And so HGH therapy was born.

Once derived from human cadavers, HGH is now produced in strictly controlled conditions by recombinant DNA technology. This process has undergone extended safety trials, and HGH is considered appropriate for use in humans.
