Brief Introduction of Adipotide Peptide

Adipotide, or FTPP, is an investigational weight loss therapy that targets fat cells' blood supply.

Adipotide is a novel medicine that has shown considerable potential in obesity research. Adipotide peptide, originally developed to treat cancer, has shown promise in tests for reducing body weight.

Adipotide (also known as FTPP or pro-apoptotic peptide) destroys fat cells by cutting off their blood supply. Adipotide is selective because it can distinguish between fat cell blood vessels and blood vessels throughout the body. In studies on monkeys, adipotide not only helps them lose weight but also improves insulin sensitivity and reduces the consequences of type 2 diabetes.

Function & Usage of Adipotide Peptide

As a result of the laidback lifestyle of humans as well as the contemporary work modality, it is evident that the need for practising physical activity has significantly reduced, this causes many people to become obese and overweight.

Helps you to reduce your weight in just a few months.
The process results in the loss of a certain amount of abdominal fat mass.

Adipotide contains potentiating positive effects on insulin sensitivity as it improves it drastically. It's reflected in using insulin efficiently on your body, which has been proven to have a positive effect on decreasing on elevated levels of blood glucose.

Adipotide maintains your health, and it allows energy use from the chemical nutrients your body is receiving.

It regulates water by removing excess water and retaining it at the appropriate time.

It processes hormones, which is useful in the regulation of BP (blood pressure).

It balances the minerals in your body, which allows the correct functionality of your body.
