Brief Introduction of gh frag 176-191 5mg

GH fragment 176-191 is a fragment molecule of gh, which consists of 16 amino acid growth hormones (amino acids at positions 176-191 at the C-terminus of the gh). This peptide fragment stimulates lipolysis and suppresses the formation of new fat mass.

In its natural form, this peptide is created and comes from somatotrophic cells that are located in the anterior pituitary gland. GH fragment in its synthetic form are somatotrophic cells, which are found in the anterior pituitary gland. These cells are also responsible for storing and releasing the hormone.

Frag 176-191, or gh (176-191) is one of the most promising peptides for the treatment of obesity according to Gary Wittert, a famous researcher. Lipolysis is the process of disintegrating fat metabolism into their constituent fatty acids under the influence of lipase enzyme. Within this simple hydrolytic process, fatty acids are exuded – the fuel for the body acting as an activator of ketone synthesis(intermediates involved in organic synthesis), for example during prolonged fasting. Lipolysis occurs in the mitochondria, where fatty acids are delivered via carnitine. The process of lipolysis is characterized by the cyclic conversion of fatty acid molecules with an elimination of two-carbon or one-carbon KoA derivatives.

The use of this preparation is not equally effective since it is explained by the fact that each person has its own natural limits of lipolysis, and if it is very low, even increasing the dosage does not lead to better results in fat burning. It is important to note that it is not necessary to worry about a catabolic process since the result of lipolysis (release of fatty acids) is a replenishment of energy reserves. In this case, not possible to catabolism.
