Basic Information Form Of H.G.H. Frag 176-191

Product Name	H.G.H. frag 176-191
Cas No.	863288-34
Appearance	White powder
Molecular Formula	C78H123N23O23S2
Peptide Purity	Over 98%
Molecular Weight	1817.1
Shelf Life	2 years
Storage	2-8

Brief Introduction of H.G.H. Frag 176-191

The H.G.H. 176-191 fragment is a fragment of growth hormone molecule composed of 16 growth hormones (amino acids in the C-terminal position 176-191 of growth hormone). This peptide fragment stimulates lipolysis and inhibits the formation of new fat masses.

The growth hormone Frag 176-191(176-191) is one of the peptides that renowned researcher Gary Wittert has identified as the most promising treatment for obesity. Lipolysis is the process of metabolizing fat into fatty acids under the action of lipase. During this simple hydrolysis, fatty acids are released and used as fuel for the body and as activators of ketone synthesis (intermediates in organic synthesis), for example during prolonged fasting. Lipolysis occurs in mitochondria, where fatty acids are delivered via carnitine. The lipolysis process is characterized by the cyclic transformation of fatty acid molecules with the elimination of two or one carbon KoA derivatives.

The use of this preparation is not equally effective because it explains that everyone has their own natural limit of lipolysis and if it is low, even increasing the dose cannot lead to better results in fat burning. Note that there is no need to worry about catabolic processes, as lipolysis (the release of fatty acids) results in replenishment of energy reserves. In this case, catabolism is not possible.
