What is Enhanced Athlete BPC157

Partly because BPC-157 is a fairly new agent, there is only about thirty years of scientific testing on it, primarily in animals. However, humans have been using BPC-157 during this same time period and no side effects have been reported and no governing sports body considers BPC-157 to be illegal 'doping'. It is used by bodybuilders in professional competitions and is so far accepted as an allowable health treatment rather than any sort of unfair advantage.

BPC-157 is a designer peptide, derived from digestive fluid and sequenced specifically for healing. A peptide is simply a string of amino acids in a particular sequence. Amino acids are the building blocks of protein and BPC-157 has 15 such amino acids.

Different sequences of amino acids serve specific purposes and BPC-157 is engineered to produce an angiogenic effect – the effect of producing new blood vessels and speeding delivery of healthy blood flow to injured areas of the body. In this way, peptide therapy can be used to replicate the body's healthy functions by mimicking naturally occurring healthy peptide strings. Angiogenesis is crucial healing and has led to immense interest in BPC-157.
