What is PT 141 Peptide

PT 141, also known as bremelanotide, is a type of peptide that we use as a medication to help with low sex drive and ED. Unlike many other ED medications, it works on the central nervous system to increase arousal and desire. PT 141 peptides bind to melanocortin receptors in your body, including in the hypothalamus which may help your brain feel more aroused. PT 141 may also activate dopamine, which is a neurotransmitter that is essential for arousal and pleasure. Both of these functions can help boost sex drive and help your brain create the "spark" needed for the physical responses to sexual stimuli, such as an erection.

How does it work?

Unlike Viagra, Cialis, Trimix and other similar medications, it does not act in the vascular system, but directly increases sexual desire within the nervous system. It stimulates and activates the dopamine hormones that happen to play a major role in sexual motivation. Dopamine is a known compound in the body, it's a neurotransmitter that stimulates performance. When you have low levels of dopamine, your libido is lowered. PT-141 is administered as a subcutaneous injection (not unlike the way HCG or Sermorelin are injected) that's given 1-4 hours before playtime and it's effects on sexual desire and spontaneous erections typically lasts anywhere from 8-24 hours. Like other hormonal influencers, it should be kept refrigerated.
