What is PT 141 For Women

PT-141 is the prior developmental code given name for Bremelanotide. This is a peptide originally developed as a sunless tanning agent. It is a melanocyte-stimulating hormone (MSH) that affects sexual arousal, aiding enhanced libido levels and penile erections. Unlike Viagra or Cialis, PT-141 is not a PDES inhibitor, and it does not target the vascular system. Instead, it acts on the nervous system via activation of neurons in the hypothalamus to increase sexual desire.

How was PT 141 discovered?

The discovery of PT 141 as an agent of sexual activity enhancement was accidental and owes its debt to scientist Mac Hadley's generous volunteering of himself, as he was conducting experiments on his own body and ended up with an eight-hour erection as a result of a double dose of an early compound, Melanotan II, during the earliest testing. α -MSH testing was first conducted on rats in the 1960s and progressed into the 80s. Melanocortins are peptide hormones responsible for regulating many physiological functions. Melanocortin analog, Melanotan I, was tested as a tanning agent, and Melanotan II as a sexual dysfunction agent.
