What is Bremelanotide PT 141

PT-141, also known as Bremelanotide, is a synthetic peptide that is used to treat sexual dysfunction in men and women. While Viagra and Cialis, which are PDE-5 inhibitors that work to increase blood flow into the penis, PT-141 is a melanocortin, which works at the brain to increase sexual desire. The synthetic peptide blend was developed from Melanotan II, and was originally intended to darken skin pigmentation and induce tanning. However, during the initial testing, patients noted a pleasant side effect – that it caused increased sexual arousal.

How Does Bremelanotide PT-141 Work?

Bremelanotide PT-141 is a molecule that binds to and activates the melanocortin receptors associated with skin pigmentation. Being that it Currently, Bremelanotide PT-141 is administered via a subcutaneous injection, ideally where there are fat deposits. The only legitimate form of the peptide is injectable. Oral pills, nasal sprays, and creams have not been shown to be an effective means in which to administer Bremelanotide PT-141.

Given that everyone responds differently to Bremelanotide PT-141, effective dosages may vary. A 2mg dose is generally effective for men and women, about 1 hour prior to sexual activity. Some studies suggest starting with a 1mg test dose and injecting an identical amount 30 minutes later. By consulting your Men's Health Institute physician, you can receive a cycle protocol best suited for your condition. In studies, some subjects responded to PT-141 in minutes while others took several hours to see the effects.

Bremelanotide PT-141 is a novel treatment option for sexual dysfunction that works in both men and women.
