What Is GHRP 2 5Mg?

Growth hormone-releasing peptide-2 (GHRP-2) is a synthetic chain of six amino acids that send a signal to your pituitary gland to release more GH. This process helps the human body stimulate the growth of cells, muscle mass, and healthy tissue. This treatment is prevalent among our older patients, as it can also boost libido and help slow the onset of deteriorating diseases such as Alzheimer's.

Aging is a natural process and many people want to slow it down and feel youthful and energetic for as long as possible. While it is impossible to prevent aging and decreasing stamina, the great news is that you may be able to ease its effects by maintaining optimal levels of growth hormone (GH) in your body.

Every body is built differently, and some people have bodies that may naturally produce high levels of GH. By age 30, your GH levels drop to 20% of what they were during your youth. Beyond the age of 30, it continues to decline at a rate of 12 to 15%.

The best candidates for growth hormone-releasing peptide-2 are older men and women experiencing chronic fatigue, anxiety, or depression or showing indicative changes in their blood cholesterol. Your age is closely correlated with how much GH your body produces. As you grow older, your body starts to produce less and less.

Signs that you may have low GH levels include weight gain, increased body fat, and weak muscles that aren't as strong as they once were. Specific symptoms may also include feelings of isolation, reduce bone density, and a great sensitivity to heat and cold.
