What Is HGH 191aa Peptide

Human Growth Hormone, commonly referred to as HGH or HGH 191AA, is produced by the healthy human body by the pituitary gland. HGH, as the name suggests, controls the growth of the body, ensuring that the cells grow and mature at the appropriate rate.

HGH was discovered when doctors were trying to understand why some children didn't develop at the right rate, and remained small and weak. It was found that injections of HGH corrected this problem and enabled children to grow properly. This was obviously a great blessing to those people with a particular condition but as an interesting off-shoot from that research it was found that HGH could affect the growth of normal individuals. And so HGH therapy was born.

Once derived from human cadavers, HGH is now produced in strictly controlled conditions by recombinant DNA technology. This process has undergone extended safety trials, and HGH is considered appropriate for use in humans.
