Description Of GHRP 2

GHRP-2 (Growth Hormone Releasing Peptide-2 and Somatotropin) is a growth hormone (somatotropin) stimulator which demonstrated high efficiency associated with sublingual and transbuccal administration in humans. GHRP-2 is probably the most potent booster (stimulator) of somatotropin secretion. GHRP-2 is an oligopeptide which can bypass liver by passing to blood flow through oral cavity blood vessels. According to studies, GHRP-2 stimulates pituitary gland inducing increase in somatotropin secretion by 7-15 times. At the same time, other GABA- and amino acid-based growth hormone stimulators raise this level not more than 2-3 times higher than baseline. Growth Hormone Releasing Peptide-2 consists of 6 sequentially connected amino acids. The growth hormone stimulator is included in peptide group interacting with G protein-coupled hypothalamic and pituitary receptors. For the first time these peptides were derived from met-enkephalin (synthetic peptide) at the end of the last century. Although GHRP-2 has no structural similarity with somatotropin-releasing hormone (endogenic biologically active substance naturally inducing growth hormone secretion), it demonstrated similar pituitary effects during clinical trials. As GHRP-2 has low molecular weight, it easily penetrates through well-vascularized mucosa of oral cavity providing means for avoiding parenteral administration. Efficiency and good tolerance of sublingual, intranasal and transbuccal administration methods are confirmed by medical trials.
