Product Description

Description

Sermorelin is a synthetic peptide analog corresponding to the human body's naturally occurring growth hormone-releasing hormone (GHRH); it consists of the first 29 amino acids of the full-length human GHRH (which contains 44 amino acids). It serves both as a diagnostic agent and as a growth hormone secretagogue. The most common method of administering Sermorelin is via subcutaneous injection.

Sermorelin (a growth hormone-releasing peptide) / Sermorelin acetate is a synthetic, amidated peptide composed of 29 amino acids. It corresponds to the N-terminal fragment of the naturally occurring growth hormone-releasing hormone (which consists of 44 amino acid residues). This substance stimulates the pituitary gland, prompting it to naturally secrete increased amounts of growth hormone.

The structure of Sermorelin / Sermorelin acetate is similar to that of CJC-1295; it is a bio-identical synthetic hormone that is highly effective at increasing the secretion of growth hormone. Sermorelin acetate is a synthetic analogue of growth hormone-releasing hormone. Naturally occurring growth hormone-releasing hormone is produced by the hypothalamus and is responsible for stimulating and regulating the production of growth hormone within the pituitary gland.
